

a written contract which specifies quantity, royalty fees, and various terms pertinent to the use of the map being reproduced.

I am a printer; if I reproduce copyrighted maps for a customer, who is liable?

You both are liable. The customer and the firm or individual who reproduces copyrighted materials without authorization can both be held liable for copyright violations.

Are royalty fees expensive?

No. Such fees are based on reproduced quantities, area of map coverage, and detail of the particular map being used. In fact, such fees are quite low, considering the skill, time, and effort required to produce a detailed map.

Once a copyright contract is granted, how long is it effective?

A copyright contract gives permission for a specific use and quantity over a particular time. The contract expires when the limited quantity is reached or on the expiration date indicated. Additional reprints will require renewed permission.

Who do I contact to obtain permission to reproduce a map?

Any member of the International Map Dealers Association can provide information relative to requesting reprint permission of copyrighted maps.
